Foreword

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS has for many years urged the development of a coordinated cooperative program for the microfilming of library materials in need of preservation. To this end it has already established in its Union Catalog Division the Microfilming Clearing House, the function of which is to assemble and disseminate information concerning extensive microfilming projects. The publication of this selected list of newspapers recommended for microfilming by the A. L. A. Committee on Cooperative Microfilm Projects is intended as a further step in the direction of such a national microfilming program.

Introduction

THE COMMITTEE on Cooperative Microfilm Projects was created by the Board on Resources of the American Library Association in 1950 in response to a growing need for long-range plans inclusive enough to save valuable manuscripts and printed records now in danger of loss through physical deterioration or the ravages of war.

The first action of the committee was to draw up a "Statement of Principles to Guide Large-Scale Acquisition and Preservation of Library Materials on Microfilm". That statement is reproduced following these introductory paragraphs. It outlines the scope of the problem and describes in general terms the requirements of a comprehensive recovery program. The committee realized, of course, that all the research materials in jeopardy could not be saved simultaneously and that it should isolate a single block and concentrate upon it. Accordingly, United States newspapers of the woodpulp period—those appearing since 1870—were selected for first attention. Because the papers of this period are not of equal quality and some obviously are not worth preserving, a selection has been necessary. This is the selected list. The papers herein listed are recommended for top priority in any filming program.

The list was prepared by representatives in the several States and is arranged geographically by States. Those who cooperated in making the selection are identified below. Without the generous cooperation of these representatives this program could not have been initiated, and the committee is greatly in their debt.

The selection is not uniform in scope or quality. This could not be avoided when decisions had to be made by many persons, working independently with only general instructions to guide them, and when, inevitably, some members took the assignment less seriously than others. But had the instructions been specific and the attitude of the representatives consistent, the choice still would have been highly subjective. Though the lists do not include every paper worth preserving, they contain most of the important ones not yet copied. About one hundred million pages are represented in the files selected here for copying.

Microfilming has been a fairly common operation now for 20 years, and many files of American papers have already been copied. A new list of those on film will be issued this year by the Library of Congress under the title Newspapers on Microfilm. That list together with this one will present a fairly complete register of the United States newspapers already recovered and those which should be. Newspapers on Microfilm will offer evidence that several States have already launched vigorous filming programs. State departments of archives and history, State libraries, historical societies, universities, State library associations and publishers generally have been the sponsoring agencies. The Cooperative Committee hopes that enough publishers, libraries, commerical and State agencies will be found in every State to continue and to complete the domestic newspaper filming program. It calls upon everyone who receives copies of the list to help organize programs for bringing up to date the filming of his State's newspapers and to cooperate with the agencies enumerated above in fulfilling the objectives of this program.

Unfortunately, lists of papers could not be secured from the States of Maine, Missouri, New Jersey, Oklahoma, and Texas. The new edition of Newspapers on Microfilm will reveal, however, that filming programs are being carried forward in some of these States and that beginnings have been made in others.

In the "Statement of Principles" which follows the committee suggests that libraries concentrate funds for filming in copying original materials instead of investing cooperatively in positive film copies of materials for which negatives have already been made. The multiplication of positive copies has been a too popular practice in the past. The policy the committee recommends assumes liberal lending agreements among research libraries. It is important that the maximum number of papers be copied with the funds available. It is equally important that film copies be lent freely between libraries lest research students be obliged to spend in travel as much as positive copies would have cost.

The members of the Cooperative Committee on Microfilm Projects are: Ralph H. Carruthers, New York Public Library; Donald Coney, University of California Libraries; John Cronin, Library of Congress; Herman Fussler, University of Chicago Libraries; Laurence Kipp, Harvard College Libraries; Charles W. Mixer, Columbia University Libraries; and B. E. Powell, Duke University Library.

Statement of Principles To Guide Large Scale Acquisition and Preservation of Library Materials on Microfilm

Prepared by the Committee on Cooperative Microfilm Projects

THE MODERN HAZARDS of war are such that civilization risks the total loss of valuable manuscript collections unless a coordinated effort can be made to reproduce important manuscript collections and locate the copies at points far distant from the originals. One may then hope that either the originals or the copies will survive. Substantial bodies of printed materials are exposed to the same dangers. But some of these printed materials, particularly domestic and foreign newspapers of the woodpulp period, disintegrating periodicals, and out-of-print books face even more certain destruction through physical deterioration. Some progress has been made in conserving these materials through uncoordinated microfilming projects, which have resulted in the deposit of copies of large numbers of manuscripts and extensive series in collections located in Europe and elsewhere. Microfilming efforts are also under way to preserve many of the outstanding domestic and foreign newspapers, and limited projects have been instituted to film early American and English periodicals. But any filming program dependent exclusively upon random selection and chance opportunities is likely to lead to the dissipation of available financial resources without a commensurate increase in either general security or accessibility. If this vast wealth of research material is to be salvaged and made accessible a more systematic attack on a larger scale is essential.

I. The Preservation of Library Materials

Perhaps the most pressing needs to which interlibrary cooperation in microfilm projects would contribute relate to the preservation of library materials, specifically, and in descending order of priority, to the preservation of (1) domestic newspapers of the woodpulp period, (2) disintegrating periodicals, and (3) out-of-print books. In each of these fields there have been beginnings, commercial or otherwise. Indeed, in the field of newspaper microfilming vigorous programs are under way in several States where numerous papers have been and are being filmed by various libraries, commercial microfilming agencies, and publishers. However, despite the relatively high interest and activity in this field, there is need for further planning which will augment current activity and resources and will induce a greater number of libraries, associations and other organizations which are interested in the preservation of the record of our civilization to assume a share of the responsibility for that preservation.[1]

Toward this end, this Committee is endeavoring to secure from each of the 48 States appropriate lists of the newspapers (metropolitan, weekly, county, labor, foreign language, Negro, etc.) which have been microfilmed and of others to whose preservation highest priority should be given. The Committee is also endeavoring to stimulate particular libraries which have an interest in specific newspapers to undertake responsibility for filming them. Even with this effort, however, it seems unlikely that available resources will suffice for a fully satisfactory rescue operation in the field of domestic newspapers.

Nevertheless, plans for preserving domestic periodicals ought not to be postponed until newspaper

[1] The immensity of the newspaper problem is reflected in the holdings of the Library of Congress in nineteenth and twentieth century woodpulp newspapers, which total over 67,000 bound volumes. To microfilm these would require over 67,000,000 exposures at a cost of roughly $2,000,000 for a negative and positive print. Even if the newspaper preservation program were to limit itself during the foreseeable future to the filming of nineteenth-century domestic newspapers, the resources of the Library of Congress would suffice only for a fraction of the total work to be done. On its own, the Library can undertake only the filming of certain large metropolitan dailies whose existence has been of major consequence as sources for our national history. The preservation of other papers must be left to the conscience and enterprise of the research libraries with strong interest in their regions, to the State and local libraries and the historical societies.

programs are well launched. To be sure, the number of domestic periodicals which are rapidly deteriorating is far smaller than the number of deteriorating newspapers not only because of the better quality of the paper on which they have been printed but also because the greater convenience of their format more adequately protects them. Nevertheless, there are titles among the domestic periodicals which should receive prompt attention or shortly there will be no extant copies suitable for filming.[2] Lists should be compiled of foreign newspapers and of domestic and foreign periodicals urgently in need of salvage operations and priorities for their microfilming established.

It must be recognized that the problem of physical deterioration of woodpulp books and periodicals is now with libraries permanently. Long-range plans for alleviating the situation must therefore be adaptable to incorporation into the regular fabric of the library economy. The even greater problem of preservation of foreign materials is covered implicitly in the following section on large scale acquisitions programs.

II. Large Scale Acquisitions Programs

The Committee shares with the Library of Congress a conviction that it is important that there be a planned program for copying large bodies of source materials in the countries of Western Europe and other parts of the world, as described in the following paragraphs, and hopes that many of America's research libraries will find it possible to participate in such a program.

The national microfilming program should be comprehensive and developed in detail as to method, type of operation, spheres of influence, priorities, and similar matters. It likewise should be flexible enough to permit alteration in nature, scope, duration, etc., without disrupting the basic structure of the program. Beginning with a statement of objectives this plan should progress through a survey of information and an analysis of all known factors, and conclude with a recommendation for action.[3]

Despite any planned program to acquire research materials in microfilm form there will be other favorable opportunities to obtain valuable source materials at moderate cost through cooperation with organizations whose activities abroad permit including microfilming projects without normal overhead expenditure, e. g., the Library of Congress projects on Mt. Sinai and in Jerusalem. Additionally, particular opportunities to perform "rescue operations" by filming bodies of important materials which are likely to be destroyed or closed indefinitely to western scholarship will merit serious consideration as they occur. It is clear, however, that any acquisitions program dependent exclusively upon such chance opportunities will exhaust the financial resources of American libraries on a miscellany of unrelated projects; and it is equally apparent that a world-wide program planned to bring to this country copies of all valuable source material which may be soon lost to us would require the expenditure of sums greatly in excess of

[2] Recently, the University of Kentucky Library circulated a list of most frequently cited periodicals and inquired into the interest of research libraries in subscriptions for them in various forms of reproduction. This commendable type of activity should be expanded on a planned basis. It relates to acquisitions as well as to preservation.

[3] The Library of Congress has taken systematic measures which are preliminary to a planned program for copying large bodies of source materials in Western Europe. This action has resulted from the conviction that a primary requirement of American scholarship is ready access to information concerning the collections of materials, published or unpublished, in the libraries, archives, and similar institutions of Europe. In 1950 the Library sent a member of its staff to Paris as the base from which to embark upon the major assignments of the mission; namely, the dissemination of the Library's philosophy of cooperation in ascertaining and sharing information, and in acquiring and sharing materials significant for research; and the surveying of quantities of unpublished bibliographical tools in archives, libraries, and similar institutions with a view to future microfilming projects. A correlative assignment was the compilation of data for microfilming facilities and on the accessibility of materials for examination and for copying.

In the execution of these assignments the Library's representative established liaison with the Division of Libraries at Unesco; acquainted himself with the survey of information on microfilm equipment which was being conducted by Unesco and with the survey of facilities which was being made by the International Federation for Documentation, in addition to making independent inquiries; spoke briefly at several international conferences and at a meeting of archivists and special librarians; called upon the directors of more than 100 institutions in Austria, Belgium, England, France, Germany, The Netherlands, Scotland, and Switzerland in order to gather at first hand essential information on the existing unpublished bibliographies, guides to collections, inventories, calendars, indexes, and similar means of access to information; recommended priorities for suggested copying projects; and, finally, placed an extensive order at the Archives Nationales in Paris. The result of the survey is embodied in a publication entitled Unpublished Bibliographical Tools in Certain Archives and Libraries of Europe: A Partial List, which the Library of Congress issued in October, 1952; it has been distributed to the major research libraries of the United States and is available to others upon application. Libraries will be encouraged to allocate funds for filming those items of special interest to them. The Library of Congress is prepared to devote as much of its resources as obligations of higher priority will permit to the reproduction of these bibliographical aids. Active participation of other libraries will bring closer the day when the American scholar will have ready access to vast quantities of information hitherto available to him only at great cost and after considerable delays.

the resources available to our libraries for such purposes.

III. Action Needed by Research Libraries

The urgency and scope of the problem are outlined above. Research libraries are urged individually to take an active, continuous, and systematic role in its solution through action as follows:

A. Adoption and adherence to the principles to govern microfilming activities and services set forth in Section IV of this statement.

B. Regular and continuing allocation of a portion of each year's book funds to microfilm projects. Research libraries should agree to purchase positive film copies of materials only when needed for continuous reference, using available funds primarily for making negative copies of printed and manuscript matter not hitherto filmed. (The percentage allocated need not be large, and regular use of from one to two percent of book budgets by each of the Nation's research libraries will support sizeable expansion of microfilming activities.) Each library should select its projects first with its own needs in mind. A secondary consideration will be the requirements of national scholarship in general. Where no compelling local need dictates the project, the library can determine an appropriate annual one (or a longer-range project to be completed in annual installments) by:

(1) Consulting with the state representative of the Committee on Cooperative Microfilm Projects to select newspapers which need microfilming.

(2) Selecting one or more items from Unpublished Bibliographical Tools in Certain Archives and Libraries of Europe to be copied, or

(3) Consulting with the Library of Congress Union Catalog Division regarding cooperative projects under way or being planned by other libraries in which the library may participate.

C. Active participation with the Association of Research Libraries, the Library of Congress, State library associations, and other learned societies and associations in initiating and supporting requests for foundation and governmental grants to support microfilming projects aimed at preserving disintegrating research materials like those identified in this statement or at bringing to this country in film form research materials which are not now available here.

IV. Principles

Only through an organized cooperative program, backed by libraries and other institutions, can acquisition and preservation of the scope envisioned be accomplished. And underlying any broad program of cooperation in which numerous libraries and agencies share the expense, work, and product of microfilming activity, there should be basic agreement on the technical standards which will obtain; on policy with respect to the pricing of positive copies of microfilm, in order to share equitably the cost of the program; and on the ready accessibility of microfilm for the use of scholars.

The Committee has agreed upon the following principles which should be followed if maximum effectiveness is to be achieved:

A. Technical Standards

Good technical standards are essential to any large-scale microfilming project. A satisfactory set of tentative standards for microfilming newspapers has been prepared for the Association of Research Libraries. The Committee endorses its use. Standards to cover, in greater detail, this and other aspects of the microfilming program envisioned by this Committee are being prepared by the ALA Committee on Photoduplication and Multiple Copying Methods.

B. Pricing

On the assumption that it is reasonable for a library sharing access to material through owning a positive microfilm print to pay a share of the negative's cost, the Committee proposes the following principles on pricing:

(1) A library owning a master negative may include in the sale price of all positive prints to other libraries or to individuals whatever portion of the negative cost it considers necessary to equalize the cost of producing the microfilm copy. Once the markup for sale of positive prints from a master negative has been established it will be continued for all subsequent sales so as not to inflict an inequity upon early purchasers or subscribers.

(2) The sale price to nonparticipating libraries or to individuals of positive prints from master negatives produced in the course of a cooperative project will be fixed by the cooperative agreement.

(3) An organization lending materials for microfilming by another library will not expect to receive in return a free positive or other compensation. (In case this is necessary in foreign microfilming, the cost will be considered as part of the negative cost.)

(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed as contravening the normal profit included in the price of microfilms established by any library.

C. Accessibility

It is important that the results of the program be made as accessible as circumstances will permit. To this end the Committee recommends the following principles on access:

(1) Permission to read.—Libraries should make microfilm as accessible as they would original materials of similar nature.

(2) Permission to copy original materials.—The owning library should not impose limitations on the accessibility for reproduction of material in its collections unless the nature, status, or physical condition of the material makes copying inadvisable.

(3) Loan of microfilm.—Any film, positive or negative, which can be replaced easily should be made available on interlibrary loan. The Committee approves and recommends to libraries the principles set forth in the report of the ARL Committee on Inter-Library Lending of Microfilm.[4]

(4) The reproduction of film copy.—Although the owning library itself should not impose limitations on the accessibility of microfilm material in its own collections, manuscript and rare printed materials available on film should not be reproduced by one library for another without permission of the library owning the original materials.

V. Microfilming Clearing House

There has been established in the Union Catalog Division of the Library of Congress a Microfilming Clearing House, the purpose of which is to provide a central source of information on extensive microfilming projects planned, in progress, or completed. Much of the material here assembled is disseminated in the Microfilming Clearing House Bulletin which is published at irregular intervals as an appendix to the Library of Congress Information Bulletin. The quality and value of this service will depend on the cooperation of all who undertake extensive microfilming projects. Therefore, to prevent unnecessary duplication of effort, all institutions are urged to report their current and completed projects on the printed cards provided by the Library of Congress and to make inquiries before starting new projects.

[4] The Committee on the Inter-Library Lending of Microfilm favors a liberal policy of microfilm lending. The principal provisions of such a policy are set forth below. It should be borne in mind that any one provision listed below is subject to limitations implied in the other provisions.

a. The conditions of loan set forth in the proposed (Approved by ALA Council, July 1952) revision of the ALA Interlibrary Loan Code under Part I: Principles and Policies should apply to the interlibrary lending of microfilm. Specific reference is made in Part I of the Code to the purpose, responsibilities, expenses, and duration of interlibrary loans.

b. Positive microfilm should be lent freely and without restriction.

c. Negative microfilm should be lent provided the lending library owns the original, or has easy access to the original for rephotographing, and provided the original is not so fragile that rephotographing would damage it. Extreme care should be exercised in handling negative microfilm.

d. Microfilm of manuscript material owned by another library should not be lent without the permission of that library except in instances where it is quite obvious such permission is unnecessary. The use of such material should be subject to the conditions imposed on the borrowing library by the report of the Committee on the use of Manuscripts (Appendix B, p. 32, Minutes of the 37th Meeting of the A. R. L., Chicago, July 6–7, 1951).

e. The requesting library is required to name in the first application for a loan of microfilm the type of microfilm reading equipment it has available for use. Microfilm should be restricted to use in the building where suitable equipment and supervision are available for its use.

f. The minimum unit of loan will be one reel. Not more than four reels should be requested at one time.

(See also ARL Minutes, January 26, 1952, appendix E, page 59.)

Editor's Note

THE ORGANIZATION of this list is similar to that of the Union List of Newspapers to the extent that it is arranged by State, with the newspaper titles listed alphabetically by key words under the names of cities and towns. The entries generally include:

1. Title of newspaper.
2. Frequency of issue.
3. Dates recommended for microfilming.
4. Number of pages to be microfilmed.
5. Reported locations of original files.
6. Information concerning any portions of files which have already been microfilmed and the name of the producer or holder of the negative.

In order to approach uniformity in the final copy it was necessary to edit the reports of the contributors and to omit, in certain instances, information concerning the bibliographical history of a title, names of counties, names and addresses of publishers, etc. Information concerning newspaper files available for microfilming varies and in some cases the listings have been condensed. It was also necessary to modify some reports on the number of pages to be microfilmed when such reports were based on the number of pages in located files rather than on the full extent of the file recommended for microfilming.

The titles have been verified in Ayers' Directory of Newspapers and Periodicals or the Union List of Newspapers. Newspapers recommended for microfilming on a current basis appear under the latest title and frequency and a few others have been changed or consolidated to conform to established entries. When all the issues in the period to be microfilmed appeared under a variant title, that form has been used. A few variant titles have been parenthetically inserted in the entries when they differ considerably from the titles under which the newspaper is entered or when they represent an additional title included with or considered a predecessor of a later one. A few scattered titles for serials were found among the newspapers recommended for microfilming. Those found in the Union List of Serials are so identified.

Asterisks were used to indicate items specifically recommended by various State committees for high priority in proposed microfilming programs or were arbitrarily supplied by the editor in certain instances where State lists of newspaper titles were submitted in order of descending importance.

A list of symbols and abbreviations used to identify the owners of original issues or microfilm copies of newspapers follows. Although the majority of the symbols conform to the system of symbols used in the National Union Catalog, variations will be noted. The variant symbols, which appeared on the cooperatively prepared lists, were retained for convenience.

MISSOURI

In lieu of providing a specific list of Missouri newspapers that should be preserved, Mr. Floyd C. Shoemaker, Librarian of the State Historical Society of Missouri, has supplied the following statement regarding the newspaper preservation program in Missouri:

"The Society began microfilming Missouri newspapers in 1937. All work is done by commercial firms through competitive bidding on contract specifications. The field is limited to Missouri newspapers.

"The purpose has been threefold:

1) to reproduce (a) editors' files and (b) library files of Missouri newspapers not in the Society's collection.
2) to reproduce disintegrating or badly deteriorating files in daily use in the Society's collection.
3) to reproduce all Missouri weeklies (about 300) received by the Society from 1945 to date and all Missouri dailies received by the Society from 1950 to date.

"In effecting the first purpose, 95 percent of the editors' files and the library files in Missouri not already in the Society's collection, have been reproduced except those in the libraries in St. Louis.

"In effecting the second purpose, the most important, deteriorating files have been filmed.

"The third purpose has been entirely effected.

"The results stand as follows; a total of 4,750,000 pages have been microfilmed, approximately 675,000 pages a year are now being filmed."
